Attorney Frank McCourt was representing the property.
The owners were requesting a signature on their development prospectus for a special permit to build a hotel on the former Polaroid site, now the site of the Market Basket complex.
Commissioners Isaacson and Daly visited the site and took photos from the trail next to the property, on Prospect Hill.
Commissioner Isaacson wanted to call attention to the fact that the view from that trail will look right onto the hotel windows, and the view from the historic park will be affected.
Mr. McCourt pointed out that there are other taller buildings being built next to it.
There was discussion on how the proposed hotel will affect the view from the trail in Prospect Hill Park.
They also discussed the topography of the area.

The Commissioners pointed out that the Historical Commission's responsibility is to determine whether proposed buildings will affect historic resources, but that approval of the project will be up to the Waltham City Council.

There was discussion on neighboring projects being developed in the surrounding area.

Commissioner Daly moved that the Historical Commission say that there would be an impact on the historic resource of Prospect Hill Park.

Some of the Commissioners discussed that they attended the Eastern Massachusetts Historical Commission Coalition's Zoom seminar, Understanding Demo Delay Implementation, on February 6, 2024. They noted that some cities and towns in the state have an 18 month demolition delay, which is a valuable tool for saving historic structures.

Commissioner Daly suggested that she might discuss it with one of the city councilors.
